

New Associations provides news, analysis and opinion relevant to the full spectrum of psychoanalytically-informed practice. The magazine covers all aspects of activity underpinned by psychoanalytic thinking, including cultural and academic work, but gives centre stage to our therapeutic mission. Its main focus is the role of psychoanalytically-oriented therapies in contemporary mental health and social care within the public, voluntary and independent sectors.

New Associations is inclusive and outward-looking, a forum for dialogue within the psychoanalytic community and with related professionals: therapists and counsellors, other mental health professionals, commissioners, policy makers, researchers. New Associations is central to the project of renewing and revitalising psychoanalytic and psychodynamic practice for the 21st century.

New Associations is a fresh, vibrant and forward-looking publication, which keeps abreast of latest developments within relevant policy and scientific fields, and is an arena for controversy and strong opinion.

New Associations is published by the British Psychoanalytic Council (BPC).
